"There is thus no possible conciliation between these two worlds [bourgeois and proletarian] and the parties that represent them. One must choose! One must take one's place in the ranks of one or the other army in the field." I could easily pass off this statement as coming from Lenin or Stalin. In reality it was written in 1901 by Jules Guesde, founder and leader of one of the first Marxist parties in Europe, the Parti Ouvrier (Worker Party) of France. Long relegated to a paragraph or two in the scholarly literature, Guesde and the Parti Ouvrier have now been taken up not only by a challenging book-length essay by Marc Angenot but also in excellent studies in English by Robert Stuart and Leslie Derfler.
